PUBLIC ART PIECE UNVEILED AT CHASE LEGACY CENTER

Building a Living Legacy donors and community leaders gathered to unveil permanent installation honoring St. Clair Place accomplishments

Indianapolis – A public art dedication took place yesterday at the Chase Legacy Center in Indianapolis' Near Eastside Neighborhood in celebration of the community redevelopment efforts surrounding the 2012 Super Bowl Housing Legacy Project.

Made possible by a grant through the Glick Fund, which provided $24,000 to the project, the sculpture celebrates the ongoing community redevelopment of the Near Eastside, specifically the Building a Living Legacy project, sponsored by the REALTOR® Foundation, the philanthropic arm of the Metropolitan Indianapolis Board of REALTORS® (MIBOR). The piece was designed and created by local artist Jude Odell with the assistance of youth from area schools.

The Building a Living Legacy initiative involved the renovation or new construction of 32 housing units in St. Clair Place that now provide permanent supportive housing for families coming out of, or on the verge of, homelessness. The homes are owned and managed by the John H. Boner Community Center. To celebrate the families and donors to the project, the John H. Boner Community Center, the REALTOR® Foundation, and the Indianapolis Art Center collaborated to recognize and celebrate the success of this project through the establishment of a piece of public art.

The sculpture, which stands almost 6 feet tall, is completely covered in handcrafted ceramic mosaic on four sides, which interpret the neighborhood's community in different ways. It highlights the unique character, renewed vitality, and quality of living in the Near Eastside community. One side recognizes the donors and supporters of the Building a Living Legacy project. The other three sides are entitled "Building Healthy Lives," "Building Community," and "Building Neighborhoods." The hand-built tiles include images of houses that reflect the unique architecture of the area, symbols of health and wellness, and smiling faces representative of the neighborhood's diverse population.

Creating the sculpture also involved elementary, middle, and high school students in the clay process. Ms. Odell, a ceramicist who has extensive experience creating public art and murals and teaching art to youth in Indianapolis, brought clay and tools to various sites so that students could create elements of the mosaic. The pieces created by the students, along with those fully crafted by Ms. Odell, were fired in the kiln at the artist's studio. They were then glazed, some with the help of a core group of older student assistants, and fired again.

Adult volunteers were also involved in building the underlying structure for the ceramic mosaic pieces and assisting in the installation process, which involved carefully adhering each of the 800-plus tiles to the surface, piece by piece. All together, the dedicated and combined work of artist, youth, and volunteers has created a proud and beautiful free-standing mosaic sculpture that will withstand the elements and last for many years as a tribute to this exciting time in Indianapolis' Near Eastside.
